Sarah Schenck is a shareholder in the Environmental practice. Sarah advises clients on a wide range of environmental issues, including environmental due diligence in connection with buy and sell-side mergers and acquisitions and real estate transactions, environmental indemnity claims, government-mandated cleanups, notices of liability, brownfield redevelopment, permitting, and enforcement matters. Sarah works closely with and supports in-house counsel and environmental, health and safety managers at national and multi-national companies on tracking, managing, and overseeing legacy contaminated properties and Superfund sites, environmental litigation matters, and transactional projects. In addition, Sarah counsels clients on complying with regulations governing environmental marketing claims and nascent environmental issues, such as per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS) and other emerging contaminants of concern.

During law school, Sarah completed the Environmental and Energy Law concentration and obtained her Master's degree in Public Health in environmental health.
